A banner at Mosul University mourns the death of Professor Fadia Muwaffaq al-Hayali in an alleged Coalition strike

Summary: In a fresh day of reported Coalition airstrikes on Mosul University, local sources said three university professors and some of their families were killed and many other civilians wounded, after jets hit academic residences. Up to 15 Daesh fighters also reportedly died.

DESCRIPTION:

Heavy Coalition activity above the city was reported from dawn onwards. Yagen was among the news outlets reporting that strikes on "professors' residences" killed eight civilians. Radio Zuhor claimed that "One university professor recognized his wife from her hand only, specifically a wedding ring, after her body was torn to shreds." ARA News reported an eyewitness within Mosul as saying that

"dozens of Daesh elements have been killed in an intense aerial bombardment by Coalition aircraft targeting the University of Mosul - where the organization responded by using anti-aircraft from inside residential neighborhoods, while indifferent to the consequences."

Among those reported killed were:

Professor Fadia Muwaffaq al-Hayali from the Faculty of Science. A tribute from her department reads: "The College of Science mourns its professor Fadia Muwaffak Athialy who died as result of bombing of University of Mosul apartments. We ask God to include her in paradise."

Dr. Ziad and his wife and three children

Professor Dr. Dhafer Ramadan Al Badrani and his wife and daughter. Dr Al Badrani was the former dean of the College of Computer and Arithmetic Sciences at the university. His other four children reportedly survived because they were elsewhere during the attack. Qusay Muthafar Jaleddin, Professor of Arabic Language and Literature at the university - though one report said he instead died in the Coalition's March 19th attack on the university.
